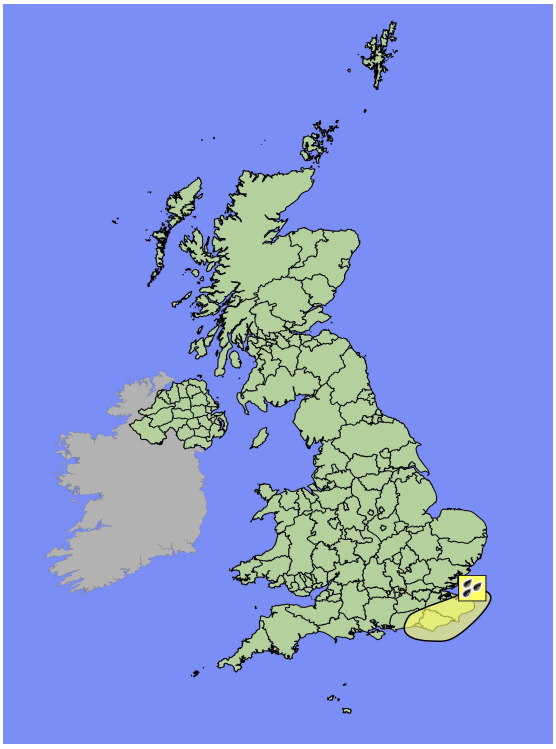
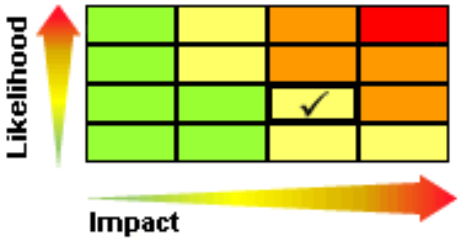
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
The depression which has affected much of the UK in recent days is now filling but the remnants are expected to swing eastwards along the English Channel on Wednesday night, passing close to southeast England during the early hours of Thursday. This may bring further locally heavy thundery downpours here. Some 10-15 mm of rain could occur in an hour, with further totals of 30 mm possible very locally. The showers should ease away eastwards on Thursday morning.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 00:05 on Thu, 27th Sep 2012 until 12:00 on Thu, 27th Sep 2012

Further heavy showers may affect coastal regions of southeast England on Wednesday night and into the first part of Thursday

The public should be aware of the risk of localised surface water flooding.
